For most of the year, long time Cypress Mill residents Joe and Sue Potak may look like an average couple living in the area, but when fall arrives, they are local celebrities. Their home has become a staple feature for Halloween all due to Joe's talented skills in constructing unique, out of this world structures right on his front lawn.

In an interview in their peaceful home where Joe's work is featured in other small scale structures like Sue's flowerpot stand and a birdbath, Sue and Joe are all smiles about their good fortune.

“If he doesn't start building at a certain time people ask what's going on,” says Sue, a registered nurse. “The whole community loves it and they come by a lot.”

So much so in fact that, Joe's colorful, architectural and slow-your-car-down-to-take-a-better-look structures have drawn roughly “a thousand children” to their home each year. Passerby and visitors have been witness to Joe's edifices of Frankenstein, a haunted pirate ship, a cemetery, the minions, a spaceship and full size gravestones to name a few. According to the Potaks many of the neighborhood children enjoyed taking turns on the haunted pirate ship built last year.

“The neighbors say he's the Santa Claus of Halloween,” Sue shares. Halloween is, in fact, Sue's favorite time of the year since her birthday falls on the 28th.

“I love Halloween!” she says emphatically. “I wish [my birthday] was on Halloween.”

Each year Joe and Sue begin the process of building without telling anyone what the structure will be, not even close relatives. He lays the groundwork and leaves clues on Facebook, but of course not much can be gathered from a few pieces of constructed wood on the ground. But everyone is left to guess.

The couple who hails from a small town in Pennsylvania has been living in Cypress Mill for 11 years and will forever call it home.

“We love it. It's close to everything. We're not leaving,” Sue muses. Joe works as a construction worker for a local company and was part of the crew that built the first Sonic drive-in fast food restaurant on 290.

“That was built before anything else was around,” she says. And what exactly inspires the construction genius to build every year?

“We do it for the kids,” says Joe.

Joe's ideas for structures are from pictures, what's considered “in” (remember those miniature Minions?) or “of his own blueprint.” This year's structure, inspired from a real witch's house in Beverly Hills, California, is arguably another masterpiece. Be sure to check it out and slow down to watch the progress!
