Life Is What You Make It

Shared by Sarphonn Paul, Transcribed by Jackie Devine

My first childhood memories are of my sister and me running through the rice paddies of Cambodia as my mother worked in the fields.

We lived in a small remote village. Looking back, I can still see her bare-foot and wrapped in a sarong moving in unison with other women as they were forced into slave labor tending the rice fields to offset the shortages of manpower, draft animals, and farm implements.

It was the 1970's, the Lon Nol government had been abolished. The new regime was executing hundreds of thousands and others dying of disease and starvation were being evacuated to brutal labor camps. Buddhist monks and educated citizens—teachers, doctors, musicians, artists and intellectuals—were being interrogated, tortured and killed.

My father, a teacher, fled during that time. He later sent for us. There was no time to grab even the barest essentials or say goodbye to loved ones. Unprepared for the journey and with no guarantees for our safety we escaped to the Thai border. We slept during the day. At night, we walked and crawled through the underbrush of the jungle, laced with landmines, staying hidden and out of sight. In the distance we could hear gunshots and people crying and screaming. Even as children we knew there were people out in the darkness that we couldn't see being hurt.

We arrived at the refugee camp in May 1981, where we found Dad and my maternal family members who I had never met. As bad as the camp might seem by today's standards, it was much better than the life we left back in the village. It felt like paradise.

In August 1981 we learned we had been chosen to migrate to the US. We were assigned to Houston, Texas. I remember seeing the great big plane on the tarmac and thought I was going to heaven.

Flying into Houston created another mind shift. Seeing the buildings, cars, and people speaking languages I didn't understand was mind boggling. We were housed with other refugee families on Caroline Street in Houston. Curtains, giving us privacy, separated our living quarters.

Within a few days, we were sent to live in Conroe where my dad found a job as a custodian for Conroe school district. Four to six weeks later, Mom also got a job. At first, he walked. Then, he bicycled to work. Rain or shine. Proudly, he would boast later, "I never missed a day of work."

Mom and Dad always put education first. They told us, "We can't give you much, but we can make sure that you get a good education."

Growing up, we were expected to help them when they picked up extra jobs. There was very little free time. Weekends, holidays, evenings, they would clean offices, churches and residential homes.

My sister and I were sheltered. There was no dating, school parties, or sleepovers.

As I contemplated college, my only options were Sam Houston or the University of Houston. Either one I would have to commute. I chose Sam Houston. This is where I met my husband. He was Hindu; I was Buddhist. Because both families believed in arranged marriages, we broke all the traditional rules.

After graduation, I held several corporate positions. One day out of the blue, my husband came home and told me he had bought me a liquor store. I'd no idea he had planned to make such a substantial investment, nor why he chose a liquor store.

I guess it was because of my parents. After they retired, they cashed in their entire retirement and bought a liquor store in Jefferson, Texas. Frankly, it's incredible that they made it. They knew absolutely nothing about selling liquor. But, they survived and have been very successful.

It has been a real journey, I traded a life of stability with recurring paychecks to that of the entrepreneurial path—with no guarantees: a life of competition, employee relations and razor-thin profit margins. However, it has changed my life, in a good way. Now I own two locations, my original shop at 290 and West 34th Street, and Civic Liquor & Wine here in Fairfield. I enjoy the challenge.

In closing I asked Sarphonn after all is said and done, what had she learned from life. Her answer, "Opportunity is out there. Hard work will take you places. Look at my parents starting with $50. Look how far we have come. Hard work and dedication will take you anywhere you want to go!"

Sarphonn and her husband have two boys. Shawn just turned 20 and is a student at A&M, and Andy is a junior in high school. Although they are American through and through, Sarphonn insists that she is trying to instill in her children the love of education and the importance of the strong work ethic that her parents passed along to her and her sister.

A Teen That Makes Every Minute Count

by Jackie Devine

The call came in on October 12, Andrew Nichols left a message telling me that Bradley Hooten told him to reach out to me about helping him promote his upcoming Eagle Scout toy drive in the Gazette. Bradley was the Leukemia/ Lymphoma Society (LLS) Student of the Year for 2018 that we featured in January. In just 6 weeks, Bradley's Team Triumph raised a grand total of $65,757!

Just pondering the possibility of covering another LLS Student candidate who was also an Eagle Scout put me in high gear. Catching up with Andrew was easy; syncing our calendars was not. It turned out that the Bridgeland High School sophomore is deeply ensconced in school activities, scouts, and runs two very successful companies—Andrew's Artisan Cakes and Andrew's Artisan Pens.

Three weeks out, the day finally arrived. Susan (Andrew's mother), Andrew, and their two beautifully groomed poodles, Autumn and Winter, met me at the door. Stepping across the threshold and into their warm, inviting home, I knew at once I was going to enjoy the interview. Little did I suspect, I would be gifted two stories, each worth investing time and the necessary resources to produce major award-winning IMAX quality documentaries.

Jumping right in, I asked Andrew why he was chosen to become an LLS Student of the Year nominee.

"As a matter of fact," he said, as if it was commonplace for a 16-year-old to get high-end coverage from one of Houston's leading media outlets, "Channel 13 ran a story on Andrew's Artisan Cakes, and part of my interview was focused on Cakes for Cancer. It seems someone working at LLS picked up on my interest in creating cakes for cancer patients and nominated me as a contender.”

In September, he received an e-mail from LLS saying that he had been nominated and wanted to know if he was interested in participating.

“After they contacted me, I had a lot to consider before accepting the offer. Not only was I concerned about my school activities and running my businesses, but I also wanted to become an Eagle Scout by May. All I had left to do was my project and one merit badge. I wanted to make sure I had the time to dedicate to my Eagle Scout project.

“So, the first thing we did was ask for a meeting to find out whether it was even a possibility. We met at Starbucks and talked about the Eagle Scouts and bounced around a few ideas. Then, I spoke to my Boy Scout Leader. We discussed running a toy drive for my Eagle Scout project for kids with Leukemia or cancer.

“After researching the idea, we found that teens were the most forgotten age along with personal experiences and activities. They needed books, movies, and games for their age. It seems they get a lot of donations for younger kids age four through 12, but the older ones seem to fall between the cracks.

“It only took us a short while to come up with a plan. After we called a family caucus and agreed on the plan, we expanded that to friends and potential multi-generational team members. In the end, we decided that we could mobilize a team to help me with my Eagle Scout merit badge project, Toys for Teens Fighting Cancer Toy Drive and on the heels of that, launch the 7-week LLS campaign to raise money and awareness to fight blood can-cers.”

Next came the approval process. Andrew’s idea had to be sanctioned at the troop level, committee level, and Sam Houston Council. The Andrew Nichol’s Eagle Scout Project (Troop 533) was approved in October.

Susan explained, “On August 20, 2014, I was diagnosed with Acute Lymphoblastic Leukemia. Thanks to God and my support team, I am now in remission.

“When this came along our family’s first thought was, we already had the platform and an extensive support system to hopefully do some real good with this campaign. Although Andrew is the highlight and the student, we can’t neglect the fact that everybody he has on his team is not just people he knows but people who have cared for us. For example, I had groups of people who had to come around the clock to give me drugs that would take two and three hours to administer. They had to get trained and would come three times a day for 3-hour stints to administer medication. Those are the type of people that are on the team.

“So, together we made the decision to be part of an initiative that can potentially find a cure and contribute to creating a world without blood cancer---and we threw our hat in the ring.”

November 11th and 12th posters and collection boxes were delivered. The collection began November 26th and will run through December 21st.

Susan Nichols, Andrew's mother, is the reason Andrew is eager to join the campaign. He says LLS does more to advance science and support patients than any other cancer organization. The fact that she is a participant in one of their research efforts is the rea-son she is in remission today. You will learn more about Susan and her journey to recovery in the Gazette's January issue.
